

Dugg Burger

A casual burger shop in the Casa Linda shopping center near White Rock Lake, and it's one separates itself from the rest. Dugg Burger's hook is scooping out the top part of the bun to make more room for toppings, with quality ingredients and a simple menu. With 12 simple toppings on display in a design it yourself style process — crispy fried onion strings, jalapenos, caramelized mushrooms, bacon, tomatoes, lettuce, and a special "Dugg sauce"! The burger is made with a chuck blend, in a medium thick patty, grilled to a juicy perfection with a side of crispy shoestring fries. After a few short minutes the burger arrives with the bun and toppings, and served at your table. They also server several local beers from Revolver Brewing and Four Corners brewery as well as pure sugar fountain drinks.

There's no surprise that Austin's food scene has come a long way in recent years! In fact, you can almost bet that a new restaurant opens nearly every day somewhere in town. This obviously isn't a bad problem to have, however too much of us tend to forget about our friendly neighboring cities scattered across the state. In fact, every city in Texas has something unique to offer in this increasingly competitive culinary world.

Nearly every city has an implied, preconceived stigma that defines the character of their town. Texans even have their own nicknames for each city that we've all become familiar with throughout the years, but only one can be called "Big D"! If you haven't noticed, Dallas, Texas has seen dozens of tremendous changes that have brought great economic prosperity to the city in the last several years. The culinary scene has surprisingly become the most notable change we've been hearing about, and some say its even better than Austin.

It's human nature to be curious about a rumor, especially if it sounds too good to be true, so we decided to investigate. We teamed up with our fellow foodie friend Jane Ko, Editor of A Taste of Koko, and took the 3 hour drive up to Dallas for our own little food tour, just to see what all the fuss was about. After 3 days of food, fun and relaxation we came back with a belly full of happy memories and a few thousand extra calories, as our little Dallas food tour surprisingly became an adventure of delicious discovery.
